Burning issues

Pull up a chair, put those feet up. Let's see here's that book you've been wanting to read. Aunt Madge's at hand and an extra pillow. All set? Join us by the fire for one of those cozy kind of evenings, punctuated by cracking logs and purring cats. This week we offer some warm-hearted alternatives for those who truly love a wondrous performance — it's guaranteed to fire up your imagination.

Log-a-rhythms

Get a burning desire? Consider fireplace. There's nothing like the crackle and pop of a wood-burning stove to warm your home and your soul. Here are some ideas to help you choose the right one for your needs.

Hardwoods: They go to 11 on the intensity scale. They range from softwoods like pine, spruce, and fir to hardwoods like oak, hickory, and maple. They give higher heat by releasing more energy per pound than softwoods. They're also more durable and last longer.

Softwoods: These are all-arounders, which means they're easy on the wallet. They burn faster and hotter than hardwoods, but they also burn faster and hotter than hardwoods, which means they're easy on the wallet. They burn faster and hotter than hardwoods, but they also burn faster and hotter than hardwoods, which means they're easy on the wallet.

Make a scene: If the fireplace is to be a centerpiece, it should be a conversation piece. Choose a style that complements your home's decor. A rustic log burner might be perfect for a cabin, while a more refined one might be better for a city apartment.

Woodstove: If you're looking for a more efficient option, a woodstove might be the way to go. They're designed to burn wood more efficiently than traditional fireplaces, which means they'll keep you warmer for longer.

Cast-iron: These are the classic choice for a fireplace. They're durable and can last for decades. They also hold heat well, which means they'll keep you warm even after the fire has died.

Steel: These are a more modern option. They're often made of heavy-duty steel and can be painted in a variety of colors. They're also very durable and can last for decades.

Brick: These are a classic choice for a fireplace. They're often made of red brick and can be painted in a variety of colors. They're also very durable and can last for decades.
